Dear Sirs;

I, as a consumer, would like to see AOL back off on litigation against Microsoft and be more constructive. For instance putting the monies that they use in trying to sue Microsoft to better use. They could put their heads together with Microsoft, work together to make new innovations. It just seems like Microsoft is always trying to defend themselves in court about one charge or another. I for one, feel like they are being persecuted for having a superior product. Leave them alone and let them do what they do best, developing more new software!

Thank You,
Linda Bettin
